

Education &
Communities
Office of Education

State Training Services

Candidate Guide Skills To Recognition

Skills Recognition
valuing prior learning

Copyright & Acknowledgements

© NSW Department of Education and Communities 2012. Reviewed in 2015.

This resource was jointly funded by the NSW Department of Education and Communities and the Commonwealth Government.

All rights reserved. This work is copyright, but permission is given to trainers and teachers to make copies by photocopying or other duplicating processes for use within their own training organisations or in a workplace where training is being conducted. This permission does not extend to the making of copies for use outside the immediate training environment for which they are made, nor the making of copies for hire or resale to third parties. Outside these guidelines all material is subject to copyright under the Copyright Act 1968 (Commonwealth) and permission must be obtained in writing from the Department of Education and Communities. Such permission shall not be unreasonably withheld.

It may not be made available for hire or resale with financial gain other than for a cost recovery fee for distribution.

Project Team

The NSW Department of Education and Communities would like to acknowledge the valuable contribution of the many people who generously gave of their time and ideas and contributed to the development of these resources by direct involvement in projects, by providing information and industry perspectives and by involvement in the trialling and review of project materials.

Disclaimer

The views expressed in this work do not necessarily represent the views of the NSW Department of Education and Communities. Further, the NSW Department of Education and Communities does not give warranty nor accept any liability in relation to the content of this work.

For further information about this resource please contact

Address

State Training Services
Adult and Community Education and Professional Development
Level 12, 1 Oxford Street
Darlinghurst NSW 2010

Email

tpworkshops@det.nsw.edu.au

Overview

- Who is this guide for? 4
- What is recognition? 4
- What can I get from recognition? 4
- What are the benefits of recognition for you? 5

Understanding Recognition

- Could this be you? 6
- How did recognition work? 7
- What about the jargon? 8
- Who is involved in recognition? 9

Recognition and you

- How do you get involved? 10
- Where do you go for information? 10
- What do you need to do? 11
- What information should you expect? 12
- How do I prove what I know I can do? 14
- What happens after the evidence is gathered? 18
- Making a decision 20
- What does this mean? 20
- What next? 21

Where to go for recognition

- Finding a Registered Training Organisation in NSW 23
- Other useful websites 23

Overview

Who is this guide for?

This guide has been produced to assist people seeking recognition for experience, skills and knowledge for which they do not hold a vocational qualification. The skills they want recognised may have been obtained through:

- Work experience
- Voluntary work
- While at school
- Life experience
- Sporting experience

What is recognition?

Recognition is the process by which your existing skills, knowledge and experience gained throughout your life, regardless of how they have been acquired, are recognised towards the achievement of a nationally recognised qualification or statement of attainment.

What can I get from recognition?

Recognition can result in the awarding of a nationally recognised qualification or in the issuing of a Statement of Attainment for part of a qualification rather than a whole qualification. You may not need a whole qualification depending on your job role, so a Statement of Attainment may be more relevant to you.

What are the benefits of recognition for you?

- You will have your skills recognised
- It saves you time in achieving a qualification as you do not have to repeat learning for skills and knowledge you already have
- It reduces time spent to gain a qualification by not undertaking unnecessary training
- It enables you to identify gaps in your knowledge and skills and therefore any learning that needs to occur to meet the requirements of a particular job role or qualification.

This guide has been developed to assist you to gain recognition. This guide will help you:

- become more informed about recognition
- understand the recognition process.

This guide will assist you to answer questions such as:

- How does recognition work?
- How do I get involved?
- Who else is involved?
- What does it mean for me?
- How do I prove my skills and knowledge?
- Do I need to have a lot of documents?
- What happens if I don't succeed?

Understanding Recognition

Could this be you?

Over the years Jim has held a number of positions in different industry areas. The tasks Jim undertook in all positions required him to: liaise with customers; take orders from customers; record and maintain order information systems; order stock; maintain stock supplies; pack orders ready for delivery; supervise delivery staff.

He also has been a member of a local volunteer organisation where he has held positions such as secretary and committee member. A keen sportsman he is active in the local soccer club organising junior players. Jim has been unemployed at times during his career but while unemployed remained active in the community as a volunteer.

Jim is interested in a career as a supervisor as he feels his experience demonstrates the ability to supervise and manage different situations. He is finding it very difficult as he has never gained any qualifications to show the range of skills and knowledge he has as a supervisor. He considers himself to be very experienced but is uncertain what his next step should be in trying to have this recognised. He has spoken to a number of friends who also do not know where he might go to find out some information.

This story is not uncommon; your story might be similar, although your background and experience may be very different from Jim's.

If he is serious about getting formal recognition of his skills and knowledge, Jim needs to think about:

How did recognition work?

Let's think about Jim and the steps to gain recognition for his skills.

1. Jim searched the local newspaper for anyone offering supervisor training.
2. He contacted a training provider who gave him information about two different courses offered for supervisors. The information included a pack which listed types of evidence that could be used to prove competence as a supervisor.
3. On reading the information Jim felt they he did not need to complete the training as he could gather the evidence that was discussed in the information.
4. He recontacted the training provider and enrolled.
5. He gathered evidence with the guidance of the assessor from the training provider.
6. Once Jim submitted the evidence the assessor reviewed this and rang Jim to discuss it further.
7. This discussion identified that there was an area that required additional evidence. An agreement was reached with the assessor about what evidence could be provided.
8. Jim resubmitted the evidence, was deemed competent, and was awarded a qualification.

Recognition is a process which varies and you will find there are differences in how individual Registered Training Organisations (training providers) offer recognition. Typically the process involves some kind of assessment of your existing skills and knowledge to determine the competencies you have.

What about the jargon?

You will hear a number of terms being used regarding recognition. Below are the most commonly-used terms.

Registered Training Organisation (RTO)

An RTO is an organisation registered to issue nationally recognised qualifications or statements of attainment for units of competency from training packages or accredited courses. This is the organisation that offers you recognition and assists you through the process. There are a variety of RTOs you can choose from, some may specialise in your industry area. RTOs consist of private providers (who vary in size), Community Colleges, Enterprise RTOs and TAFE.

Nationally recognised qualification

A formal certification that is recognised nationally and awarded under the Australian Qualifications Framework for the achievement of competencies.

Statement of Attainment

A nationally recognised statement awarded for attainment of units of competency which partially contribute to completion of a qualification.

Competency

Competency is a mix of knowledge, technical skills, understanding, problem solving and attitudes that can be demonstrated in the workplace. To be deemed competent you are assessed against the relevant units of competency.

Unit of competency

This is a description of the job or work function that you need to perform such as Operate a Bar, Drive a Forklift, Communicate in the Workplace, and the standard of performance and knowledge required.

Assessment

Assessment is a process in which the candidate and the assessor work together to gather evidence to enable the assessor to make a decision on the candidate's competence.

Who is involved in recognition?

Recognition and you

How do you get involved?

- By contacting an RTO – a list of RTOs can be found at www.training.gov.au, and under training organisations in local phone books and newspapers.
- By talking to others who may have recently undergone recognition or training.
- By reading this guide for assistance and information.

Where do you go for information?

You may find information about your industry (or the industry you want to work in) and relevant qualifications in a number of ways, for example:

- Contact an RTO
- If you are employed talk to your employer and/or workplace supervisor
- Talk to others in your workplace or volunteer organisation
- Talk to others in your industry
- Talk to others who may have already been involved in recognition.

Information can be provided in a number of ways:

- Websites
- Information sessions
- Marketing materials
- Course brochures
- Specific recognition leaflets
- Individual interviews or course advisory sessions.

What do you need to do?

If you want to find out more about recognition, you can approach an RTO which will be able to provide information relevant to you. This information should relate to the industry in which you want to work or have worked in the past.

An 'industry' is your work environment, and could include a volunteer work environment. For example you may work in the Retail, Hospitality, Building and Construction, Community Services, Farming or Horticulture Industries. You may also be a volunteer at your local SES, a charity or a sports club.

The industry area you come from, or want to work in, will determine the types of competencies you have and the qualifications which are relevant to you. This in turn will determine the type of assessment process and the types of information you need to receive from an RTO.

The RTO will assist you to identify relevant units of competency and explain the types of evidence (proof of your skills and knowledge) required.

Think about

1. What industry area do you work in?
2. Where have you gained your knowledge and skills?
3. Can your employer or supervisor tell you about relevant qualifications in your industry?
4. Is there an RTO you can talk to about relevant qualifications in your area?

What information should you expect?

There may be two stages where information will be provided to you by an RTO. General information should be provided to you before enrolment and then you should receive more detailed information when you have enrolled.

The table below provides a list of typical information you should expect.

| What to ask for | What information you should expect |
|---|--|
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • A definition of recognition (what it is) • Is it available to you? • What it means to you in practical terms • The costs involved and what the cost covers • The support available • Typical timelines for the process • Initial qualification-related information • Recognition process/flow chart • Pathways specific to the course/s • Individual interviews or course advisory sessions • How to get started. | A recognition kit/guide which contains: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Information and advice including support available to you • Steps in the recognition process including what happens if you think the process was unfair • Roles and responsibilities of the RTO, assessors and you • Suggested evidence requirements (what you can provide or demonstrate to prove your skills and knowledge) • Guidelines on gathering evidence • Guidelines on how to present your evidence • Information to help you to assess your skills against the competencies you are interested in • Information about what happens if you are successful/unsuccessful • How feedback on your assessment will happen. |

You should be supplied with enough information to make an informed decision about whether to pursue recognition.

Think about

There are a number of things you should consider when reviewing the information provided:

1. Have you received the information you need?
2. What else do you need to know?
3. Is it relevant to you?

When thinking about whether you will be able to proceed with recognition you should ask yourself:

4. Am I currently working in a job relevant to my industry area?
5. What tasks do I perform in my job or have performed recently in jobs?
6. Am I up to date on any specific legislation and regulations relevant to my industry?

How do I prove what I know I can do?

The RTO will support you in gathering evidence to prove you have the necessary knowledge and skills.

You will be working with the RTO to identify:

- Evidence you may already have e.g. work documents, testimonials from previous employers/volunteer organisations, samples of your work
- Evidence that needs to be collected by the assessor e.g. the assessor may observe you completing a task and/or ask you questions to confirm your knowledge.

The RTO will help you understand what evidence is and what specific types of evidence might be suitable to gain the qualification you are pursuing.

Evidence for recognition is not limited to existing documents you already have. Evidence can take a number of forms and might include any combination of:

- Questioning – the assessor may give you written questions, or interview you and ask questions verbally
- Observation of practical tasks - the assessor may observe you performing tasks in the workplace, in a simulated environment, in the classroom or any combination of locations
- Finished products – items you have produced in your work, which could vary from food you have cooked to reports you have written
- Presentations – the assessor observing presentations made by you
- Video and/or audio taped evidence – showing you completing tasks
- Third party reports – references or answers given by third parties to questions from the assessor, providing examples of your work ability relating to the standards – this can be verbal or in writing
- Documents – such as relevant qualifications/transcripts, project plans and reports, minutes of meetings, correspondence, resources developed
- Anything else that you or the assessor/RTO can think of that is relevant and proves your competence.

You should decide with your assessor the specific types of evidence to be collected, the timelines for submission of evidence and what form the submission should take.

John owned a small business specialising in providing tree services – pruning, felling, and removing stumps. He employed two teams of four – each headed by a team leader with the qualification AHC30810 Certificate III in Arboriculture. The remaining team members were labourers without formal qualifications who had learned many skills in John’s employ – workplace safety, teamwork, communication – both verbal and non-verbal – as well as a range of skills in horticulture, arboriculture and using tools and equipment.

John approached a large local training provider to see what recognition might be possible for his workers if they enrolled in a relevant qualification.

After consultation a combination of types of evidence were identified to be collected by:

- An assessor observing the teams at work and using an observation record/ checklist to capture evidence of the skills observed – in this case the RTO would provide and complete the paperwork;
plus
- John providing references verbally – in answer to a set of questions based on relevant competencies. Questions would be devised by the RTO and recorded by the assessor. This would help ensure the workers had performed at an acceptable workplace standard over a period of time;
plus
- The workers themselves providing verbal answers to a set of questions based on relevant competencies to ensure their depth of knowledge and ability to handle contingencies was sound.

What evidence could my assessor gather through, for example, observation or questioning?

What evidence can I collect - such as testimonials?

What evidence do I already have such as work records, certificates or samples of work?

Here are two examples of different ways evidence can be presented

Example 1

Ray has worked for a local building company for a number of years. His main tasks are: adhering to Workplace Health and Safety requirements (his safety and the safety of others), following plans developed by his supervisor, preparing and handling materials, using tools and equipment, carrying out basic demolition. The table below shows the units of competency that may be suitable and the types of evidence that could be gathered. As the tasks are very hands on, assessment would take place at the work site.

| Possible units of competency | Possible evidence |
|---|---|
| CPCCOHS2001A - Apply OHS requirements, policies & procedures in the construction industry - CPCCBC4012B - Read & interpret plans & specifications CPCCCM004A - Handle construction materials - CPCCCA2002B - Use carpentry tools & equipment CPCCCM2009A - Carry out basic demolition | The assessor observed Ray at work. The assessor asked Ray questions about his knowledge. Ray obtained a report from his supervisor outlining the tasks he performs at work. |

Example 2

Beryl is a supervisor in a large retail outlet in the city. The outlet has a number of locations and it is Beryl's responsibility to supervise staff across the locations. Beryl has had to deal with a number of team and staff issues across the locations which she has done successfully. Her tasks include: organising her own work, supervising the work of others but under her manager's supervision, adhering to organisational WHS policies and procedures, developing teams and team members, developing and implementing communication amongst team members. Beryl would like to gain some recognition for the skills and knowledge her position requires.

Beryl's assessment will use workplace evidence but no observation as it is difficult to 'see' the requirements of the units by observation, therefore observation is not the most effective way to gather evidence of Beryl's competence.

| Possible units of competency | Possible evidence |
|---|--|
| BSBWOR404B - Develop work priorities BSBCM4114 - Monitor a safe workplace BSBLED401A - Develop teams and individuals BSBWOR402A - Promote team effectiveness BSBWOR401A - Establish effective workplace relationships | Beryl completed projects in the workplace which were identified by Beryl and her assessor. Beryl produced work records eg her work plans, minutes of meetings, risk assessments she had conducted. The assessor asked Beryl questions about her knowledge. Beryl obtained a report from her supervisor outlining her tasks and how she performs them. |

What happens after the evidence is gathered?

Once you have submitted your evidence the assessor reviews it against the units of competency.

The evidence is reviewed together as a whole and recorded by the assessor using documents developed by the assessor and the RTO.

The assessor needs to ensure that your evidence:

Is valid: does your evidence relate directly to the unit of competency; demonstrate relevant skills & knowledge; and is it appropriate to the relevant level required by the competency?

Is sufficient: does your evidence include all the critical tasks and knowledge in the unit of competency; prove you have performed these over a period of time and in different situations; and have you submitted enough different forms of evidence?

Is authentic: can each piece of evidence be clearly identified as your own work and is it dated and referenced; where your evidence is part of teamwork, is your specific role clearly defined; are qualifications, references, licences etc presented by you certified documents; are your verbal or written accounts about what you can do verified by a credible third party and/or supported by documented evidence?

Is current: does evidence demonstrate you have the skills and knowledge required to meet current performance requirements?

An interview, whether face-to-face, by telephone or other means is a common part of any recognition process. This will allow your assessor to:

- Ask questions to explore the extent of your knowledge
- Seek clarification about items of evidence
- Ensure the whole competency is demonstrated.

Consider the example below:

Case study

Gathering and producing evidence

Sally submitted evidence to gain the Certificate III in Public Safety (Aquatic Search and Rescue) PUA31312. The evidence provided was judged against the relevant units of competency. The assessor looked at each piece of evidence to examine where it related to the units of competency and whether it was valid, current, sufficient and authentic.

- Evidence was validated by relating it to the relevant units of competency to ensure that it adequately reflected the requirements.
- The sufficiency of the evidence was established through observing the candidate as well as through the documentary evidence provided by the candidate.
- Currency of evidence was established through the observation of the candidate, as well as speaking to her supervisor about the work she was currently doing.
- The authenticity of the evidence was established by having a statutory declaration signed for photographs provided, and by calling her previous employer and speaking to her current supervisor.

An interview was arranged with the candidate to explore specific knowledge requirements relating to health and safety. This interview was conducted over the telephone to minimise the cost to the candidate of having to travel to the office.

Making a decision

The assessor will make a decision about your competence and will discuss this with you – in a face-to-face interview or by telephone. Receiving constructive feedback from your assessor is very important at this point.

The assessor will make one of the following decisions:

- You are competent (C) in a unit (or units) of competency
- You are not yet competent (NYC)
- Further evidence is required.

What does this mean?

Competent - you will be issued with the qualification or statement of attainment and the process for issuing of the official credential will be explained.

Not yet competent - options are explored which could include:

- You being issued with a statement of attainment in units achieved if the whole qualification is not achieved
- You undertaking further training by enrolment in a class to meet skills gaps
- You undertaking further training by enrolment in online or distance education
- You being asked to complete work-based projects to further develop skills and/or knowledge.

Further evidence required – really means that for some reason the assessor could not make a decision based on the evidence submitted so far. This could have been for a number of reasons:

- Evidence did not relate clearly to the units
- Insufficient evidence
- Evidence was not current
- There were inconsistencies in the evidence submitted.

This is where the assessor will discuss with you options for gathering more evidence or gaining the qualification/units of competency in another way.

You should be provided with enough feedback to ensure you understand what the next step may be and why you were assessed as either not yet competent (NYC) or are required to present more evidence. This should be an open, transparent process which includes two-way communication so that you can ask questions.

What next?

Your assessor will be required to complete RTO records of your assessment. How this is done will depend on the RTO's record keeping procedure. However there are clear principles that underpin this to ensure:

- Your privacy is maintained
- Confidentiality is ensured
- RTO legislative requirements are met
- Any licensing requirements are met
- Any contract requirements are met.

Your personal records must be kept securely by the RTO for the required period of time.

You have access to these records and if for some reason you lose your qualification or statement of attainment you can approach the RTO for a copy, though this may involve a cost.

Recognition checklist:

| Did you receive | Yes | No |
|---|-----|----|
| Information prior to enrolment that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • was easy to understand • was clear and concise • included enrolment information • explained what recognition is • explained what it means to you • explained that it is available to you • included costs involved and what the cost covers • included the support available • included timelines and • included initial qualification-related information? Was the information sufficient to guide your enrolment decisions? | | |
| On enrolment Did the RTO supply a recognition kit specific to the qualification and industry and include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • information and advice that was easy to understand and included advice about support available to you • steps in the recognition process including what you can do if you think the process was unfair • roles and responsibilities of the RTO, of assessors and you • suggested evidence requirements • guidelines on gathering evidence • guidelines on how to present your evidence • information to help you assess your skills against the competencies • what happens if you are successful/unsuccessful and • how feedback on your assessment will happen? Can you continue and gather/produce evidence for submission? | | |

Good luck in your endeavours

Where to go for recognition

Finding a Registered Training Organisation in NSW

Only a Registered Training Organisation (RTO) can recognise your skills and issue you with a qualification or Statement of Attainment.

You can find an RTO by going to training.gov which is the National Register on Vocational Education and Training in Australia:

www.training.gov.au

Sites of potential interest to candidates

Australian Skills Recognition Information (ASRI)

The ASRI site is part of the Department of Immigration and Citizenship main site. It tells you about skills recognition for the purpose of migration to Australia or having your skills or qualifications, which were gained overseas, assessed to allow you to practice your occupation in Australia. You can also find state-specific licensing and registration requirements to practice your occupation in Australia.

www.immi.gov.au/asri/

Centrelink Career Information Centres

Find out if Centrelink's Career Information Centres can help you by looking in this section of the Centrelink site. The centres are 'one-stop-shops' providing a comprehensive free service to all Australians. Specialist staff provide assistance to students, the unemployed or people who are looking at changing jobs. Career Information Centres can help customers make informed decisions about education, training and employment options and pathways.

www.humanservices.gov.au

Skills and Trade Recognition

This site explains the processes which allow people who have trade skills and experience but do not have formal qualifications to have them formally recognised by the NSW Vocational Training Review Panel (VTRP) and receive trade certification.

www.training.nsw.gov.au/skills_trade_recognition/index.html

National Centre for Vocational Education Research (NCVER)

www.ncver.edu.au

Australian Skills Quality Authority (ASQA)

ASQA is the national regulator of Registered Training Organisations in all States and Territories except WA and VIC

www.asqa.gov.au/

myfuture

This site gives you information about career planning, education, and training options for Australian jobs. You can use the myguide feature to guide you through activities to help you explore your career. You will answer questions, explore career suggestions made by myfuture, select career favourites, clarify your career direction, and then create an action plan to help you reach your career goals. The section called ~The Facts~ gives you access to information on career related topics.

www.myfuture.edu.au/

HSC/TAFE Credit Transfer

This website is a useful reference for school students, parents, teachers, career advisers and other interested persons on credit transfer arrangements between the Higher School Certificate (HSC) and TAFE NSW.

tstwww.tafensw.edu.au/courses/rpl/

Trades Recognition Australia

International skills assessment for people intending to migrate to Australia.

www.tradesrecognitionaustralia.gov.au/Pages/default.aspx

International Education Group

Advice on how Australian and overseas qualifications compare to help overseas qualified people study and work in Australia.

<https://internationaleducation.gov.au/Services-And-Resources/services-for-individuals/Pages/Services-for-individuals.aspx>

